

The Path to Healthy, Connected Jewish Teens

Rosh Hodesh helped us find ways to make Judaism meaningful and relevant to our lives.

In Shevet Achim, we can say anything without being judged. I don't have anything else in my life like it.

At Moving Traditions, we believe that when Judaism promotes self-discovery, challenges traditional gender roles, and celebrates a diversity of voices, teens will grow into healthy, connected Jewish adults.

Exploring Identity, Building Community

At Moving Traditions, we believe that in order to have a healthy Jewish future, we must invest in teens' health and well-being.

Most teens drop out of Jewish life right after their bar or bat mitzvah. This is a problem for the Jewish community.

It is also a problem for teens who, research shows, benefit from being connected to a larger, values-based community.

The solution, however, is not to focus on making teens more Jewish.

The Whole Teen

Instead, we need to meet teens where they are, connecting Jewish wisdom to the challenges and joys of their daily lives, such as self-esteem, body image, friendship, romance, and academic stress, while encouraging teens to question fundamental ideas of identity and society.

This is what teens find so meaningful in Moving Traditions' experiential signature programs, Rosh Hodesh and Shevet Achim. Teens meet monthly in groups of 10 peers, guided by a trained adult mentor, using games, art, creative ritual, drama, debate, and discussion.

The Jewish Future

As a result of this approach, research shows, Jewish teens feel an increased sense of connection to themselves, to their Jewish peers, and to the Jewish community.

Moving Traditions has found—in an independent evaluation—that when we promote self discovery, challenge traditional gender roles, and celebrate a diversity of voices, teens grow into adulthood with confidence, compassion, and a lifelong connection to Jewish community.

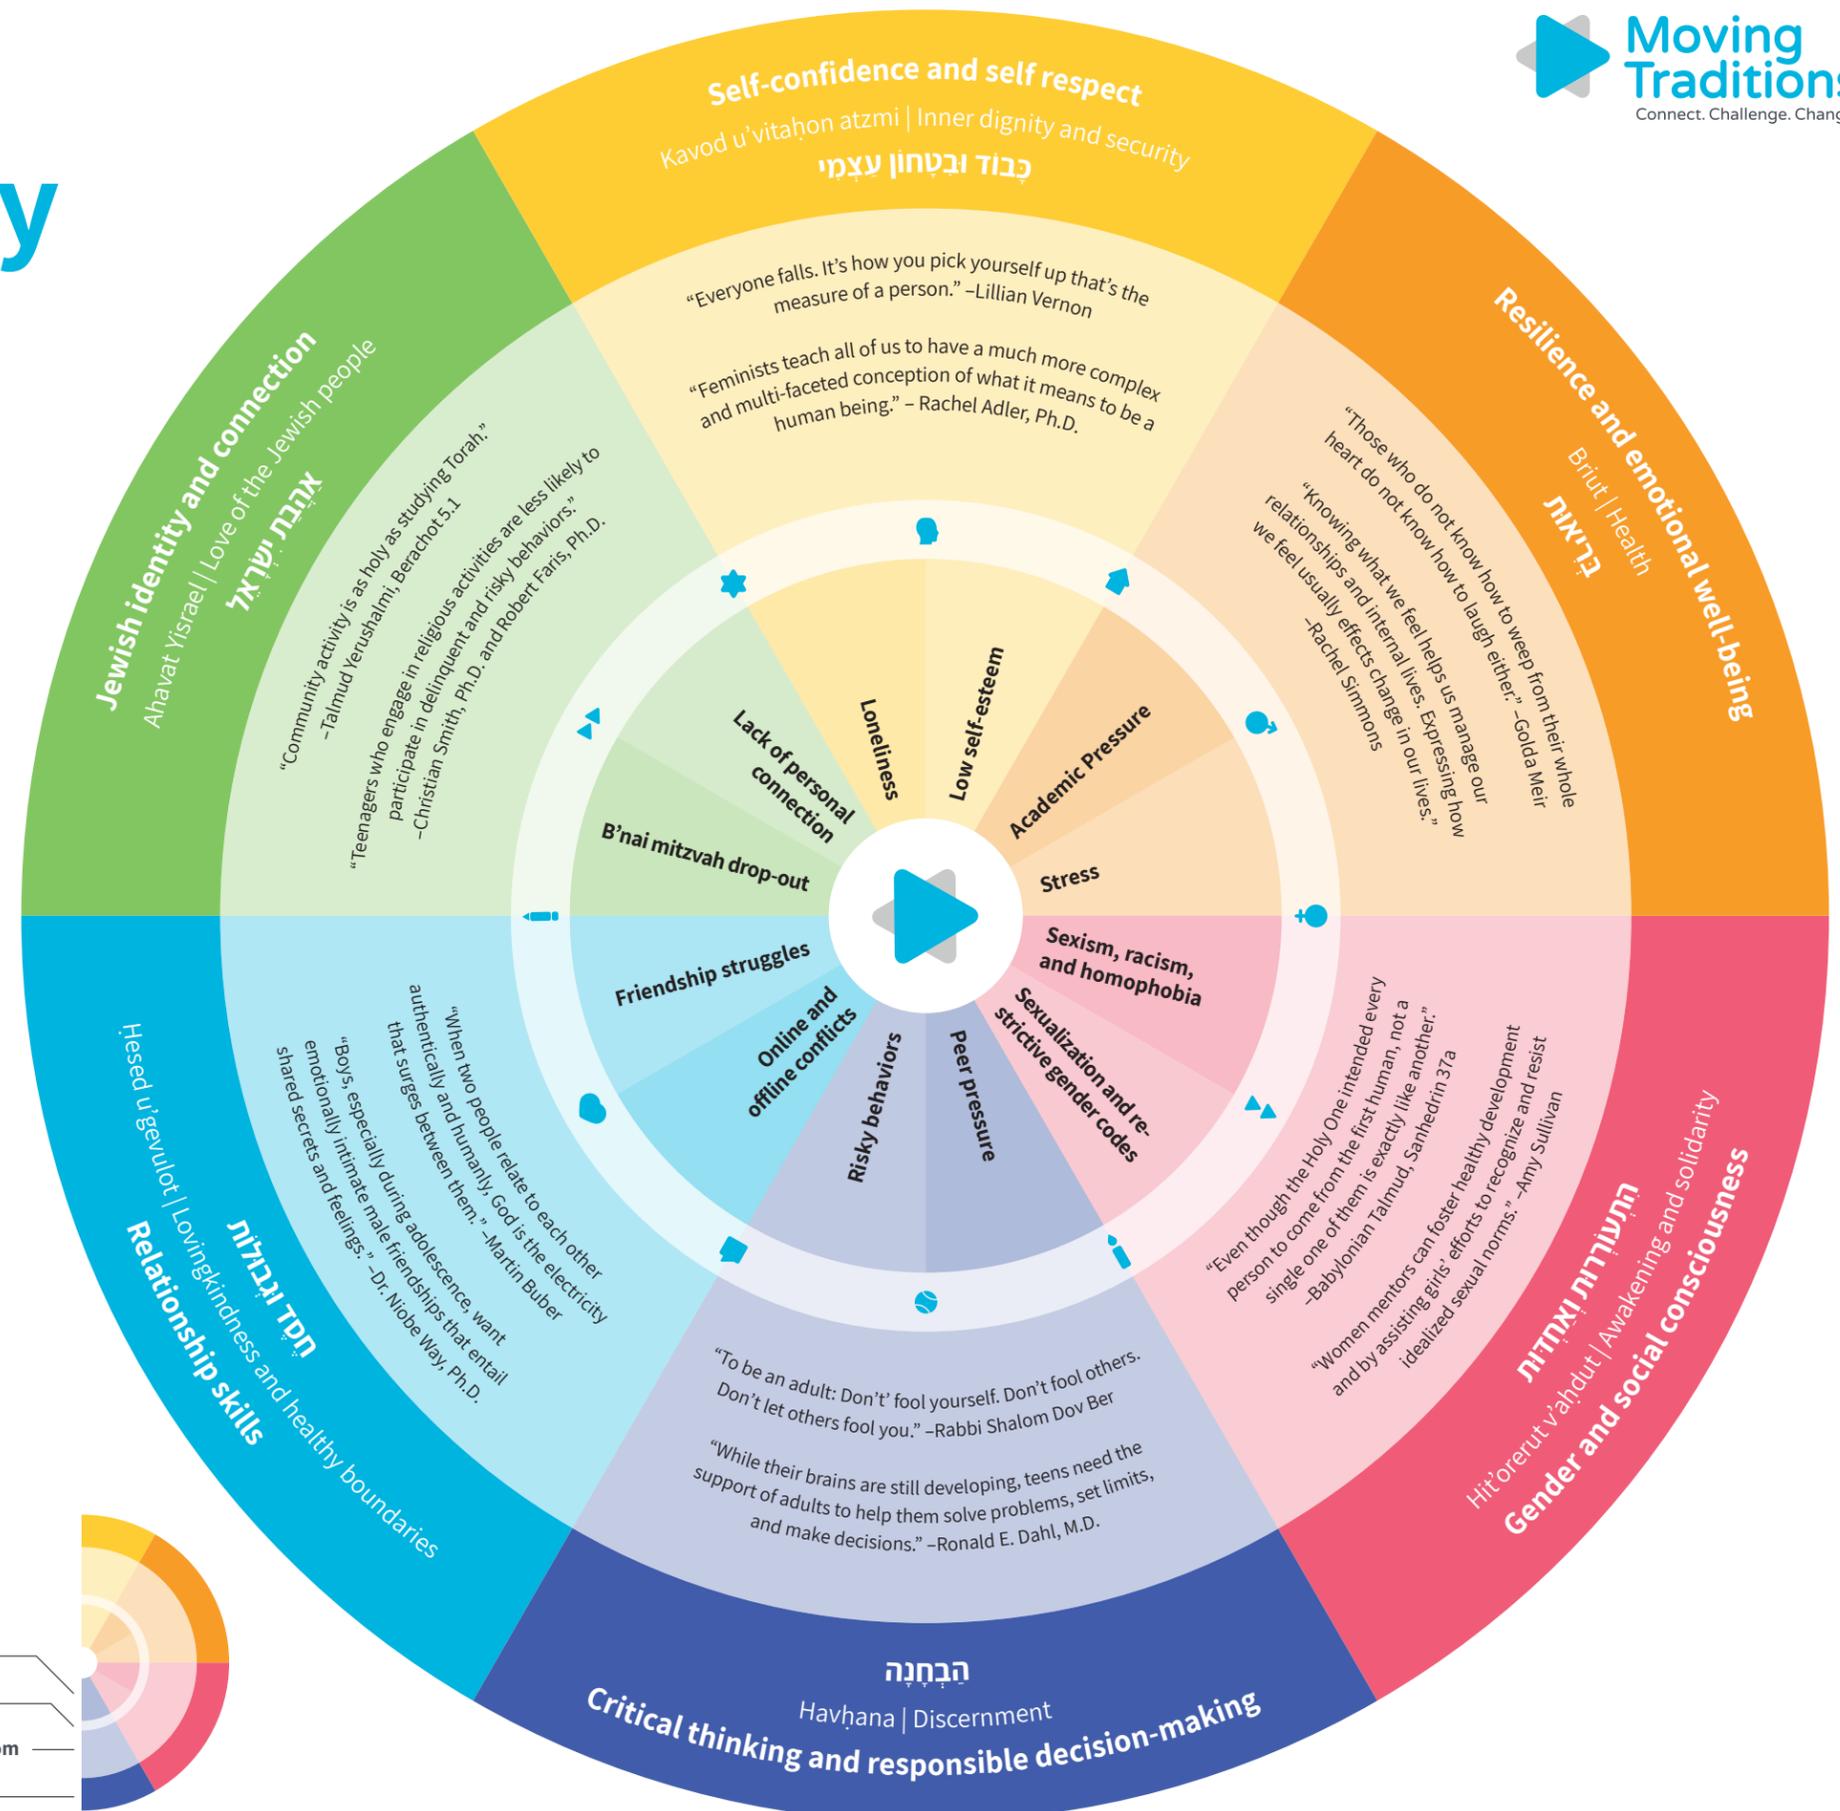

Here's how we do it.
